Resistance/Strength/Weight Training: This type of training increases muscle strength by making your muscles work against a weight or force, it improves muscular strength and endurance. There are many different forms of resistance training and it can include free weights, weight machines, resistance bands or your own body weight. There is a common misconception that using weights will make you bulk up, resistance training does not make you bulkier, it will make your muscles more defined and will make your muscles look tighter and more sculpted. Weight training may increase your weight slightly, but muscle mass is more dense than fat mass and takes up less space so even though your body weight may increase, your body size may shrink. In addition, muscle helps you maintain a healthy metabolism because muscle burns more calories than fat.

Nutrition – SUGAR: Nutrition plays a key role in our overall health and we get most of the nutrients our bodies need from the foods we eat. While it's great to treat ourselves with foods that might not be nutrient dense, it is important to be informed about the amount of sugar we consume. Though it is the main ingredient in the delicious Cadbury Mini Eggs many of us consumed this weekend, processed sugar is something we should eat in moderation: "While sugar is easy to spot in candy, soft drinks and ice cream, it also hides out in foods you might not expect — including peanut butter, pasta sauce and even bologna! Robert Lustig decodes confusing labels and sugar's many aliases to help determine just how much of that sweet carbohydrate makes its way into our diets." Check out this TED Ed video to learn about sugar and the role it plays in our nutrition:
